

- What does being committed to critical dialogic pedagogy mean to you?
  - It means to continue to be committed to learning. To know that even if in the current moment you agree with the most forward-thinking, the ideas can and will change later on, and as an individual you need to acknowledge that and educate yourself for the betterment of yourself as an individual and for the environment in your classroom. Learning that is progress for continuous personal work and more inclusive practices for the future.
- What does curiosity mean to you, and how can you continue to cultivate it within yourself and others?
  - Curiosity is allowing yourself to learn new things. That can even be from the people you are educating. That opens the door to more inclusive learning and thinking. You can learn from anyone, no matter their educational level or positionality.
- What is some advice you want to give yourself....
  - Continue on your path of personal growth, keep growing to keep shining.
  - Keep learning and staying curious for inclusivity
  - Remember that you got to this point despite it all because you are smart and the work you do is extremely important.
  - Even if no one recognizes it you have made impact for inclusivity in the theatre department and that is success.
  - Take breaks and always remember that you have done all that you can in some moments.
